It is February morning. ^(gr) Early dark morning, maybe around 6:00 AM. I don't know why I decided to wake up that early; probably because I'm still not used to ^(gr) the time zone of my native city, in which I arrived ^(lex) yesterday evening from Moscow. Seven hours ^(gr) is quite a big ^(gr) time difference to deal with in one night. Or maybe I just can't sleep because I was ^(lex) to excited ^(gr) about today. My winter holidays have finally started and after having a ^(lex) small rest for three days I've bought tickets ^(gr) on the closest date and flew to the Far East ^(gr) to, finally, reunite with my best friend ever, whom I haven't seen for more than eight months which felt like ^(gr) eternity. Two hours passed while I was laying in bed ^(gr) dived in my thoughts and feelings and it was time ^(gr) to get up. We decided to meet at 12:00 PM to spend the whole day together so I have plenty of time. I've never felt like this. I was nervous, excited and very happy at the same time so while having ^(gr) breakfast doing my make up and picking what to wear I kept smiling and imagining how it will ^(gr) happen. Will she be happy to see me as much as I am? Will we ^(gr) hug each other immediately as we meet or will we just stare at one another's eyes without understanding that it is actually happening. My phone ^(gr) tinged, dragging me out of this infinite flow of questions. It was a ^(gr) message from her in which she was asking me ^(gr) in a hundredth time about ^(gr) are we actually meeting today at the exact place and the exact time. Well, I can say that I didn't believe in it ^(gr) too. It usually takes me about fifteen minutes to get to the central ^(gr) square but this time the traffic was really bad ^(gr) so it took me more than thirty minutes to get there. When I got out of the bus I ^(gr) texted to my friend that I need just five more minutes and reached to the square. When I reached the ^(gr) fountain right in the middle ^(gr) of the square where we were supposed to meet I saw her red hair without a hat, gloves and winter boots as usual. I shouted her name as loud^{85c} as I could and when she saw me a wide^{32c} smile appeared on her face and she rushed towards me^{40c} to give me the biggest hug ever and making me^{41c} finally believe that it is actually happening.
