Unbearable Life

Having got up at 8 p.m., I realised I had overslept and I would be late for work again. I <sup>w.v.</sup> despised going to the office every day but I had no other options because this job was my <sup>30</sup> the only source of income. <sup>40</sup> I reluctantly went to the kitchen, had some bland soup (yeah, of <sup>50</sup> that's sounds ridiculous but it's the truth) and then got to the hall to put on my conventional suit. I didn't even have enough time to brush my teeth!

When I went outside I felt more irritated. It seemed like the weather conspired against me. My plan to reach the office earlier - ~~the wind~~ was blowing heavily. It appeared neglecting to brush my teeth in order to save some time was in vain because it usually <sup>130</sup> And it did. <sup>140</sup> Having entered the office, I figured out it <sup>150</sup> took me two hours to get there. Luckily the boss was on assignment and nobody swore at me.

So, when I finally managed to get to my computer I felt a bit relieved but only for a while. I knew I had a pile of stupid papers to attend to. I spent the whole day making fruitless endeavours to understand what was written in these papers but I failed to accomplish this task. I could barely It was incomprehensible to me why I couldn't apply the knowledge I had obtained studying at university and had to waste my life working with papers...

I returned home exhausted. The pale walls resembled a cage I couldn't evade. The life that was severely constrained became intolerable. The next day I quitted my job having dismissed it as a waste of time. That day the weather was splendid... It was the new beginning for me...
