It was ⁹⁰ summer of 2015 when I ²⁰ found out I had only six months left to live. In spite of everyone being absolutely heartbroken, I did not show ³⁰ any signs of grief. To me finally knowing the exact time ⁵⁰ felt like a relief, since I have always been terrified of sleeping due to the probability of not waking up the next morning. Now I have about 180 mornings left! It is not like anxiety will ever leave me, but it surely makes things easier.

The confirmation of the diagnosis appeared ⁹⁰ to be a sign from above, which was meant to be ¹⁰ a call for action rather than an encouragement of my miserable lifestyle. It was a breakthrough.

I have never been ¹²⁰ passionate about travelling, nor have I ever had enough ¹⁴⁰ money to do so, but after gathering all my savings ¹⁶⁰ was pleased with the results. The next day I ¹⁸⁰ got a one-way ticket to Brighton. It was never clear to me why I chose this exact place, it just felt right.

I have not told about my plans ¹⁹⁰ to anyone. My loved ones watching me perish ²¹⁰ seemed ²³⁰ the least appealing outcome. I have decided to have ²⁵⁰ this time ²⁷⁰ to myself and reflect on my deepest thoughts and feelings, maybe even writing a book. I ²⁹⁰ did it would be called something like "David Jones: How overthinking can lead to crucial consequences".

If you are reading this, please ²⁴⁰ do not be concerned. This is not a suicide note. I just wanted ²⁶⁰ to let you ²⁸⁰ know that I am well and I did not contact you in months for a reason. I do not want to appear narcissistic or heartless, ³⁰⁰ nor do I want you to pity me or try to find my location. My whole life has ³²⁰ been leading up to this moment: a moment of complete harmony with self, which you know I never had.
