Alone

The sound of the clock standing on the window is the only sound in a whole flat. How long has it already been? No calls, messages, nothing that could interrupt this eternal silence. Should I turn the TV on? It would only disturb me now? I have to force myself to wait a little longer. But wasn't I awaiting all these years? Nowadays when communication is available to everyone, what is a trouble in giving a simple call? I'm not even regarding keeping in touch continuously, once a year is sufficient. So where can it be? Probably I forgot to turn on the notifications on my phone as I have had woken up. Yesterday I left it under the sofa and now it's gone! Damn it, every bone of my body is greating, I should have applied that medicine yesterday. There's no sight of my cell phone in the kitchen, there's only one place to check. Ah! It was probably my wife who brought you here. But the screen is stable and not displaying anything besides some general data. I guess, I have to wait more patiently, hm?

Three more hours have passed. It's already lunch time. I'll go take a bite while you are in charge for my messages, you got it?

It's half past six now. They wouldn't be this late.

Then, what is the reason I don't see them in front of me? Don't worry, they were definitely going to visit me today.

The glorious sunset has faded away. Why did I even assure myself that my children would come to see me on my birthday? I'm not a worthy father to come for. They were never going to visit the house they once left apart, after all.
