Museums: to charge or not to charge?

Nowadays to go to some museums you have to pay, but others are free. Some people think it is bad, while another argue with them. I am going to show you both sides.

On the one hand, when people have to pay or something, their behaviour changes: visitors are more careful and interested. More than that, museums that charge for admissions usually look better both inside and outside have bigger exhibitions. Such reasons make people want to visit it. GR

But on the other hand, museums should be free. They give us a lot of knowledge and cultural awareness and should be provided with government money. If museums are free, more people will have an opportunity to visit them, and more of us will gain new information.

My point of view is that governments should make all museums free to attend. The more people are enlightened with knowledge, the smarter the population of the country is. Many people with low income will finally receive possibility to visit museums freely. Once I have been to a tiny village with an opened ^{wo} to attend museum and was really surprised by the number of people st there: everyone looked so interested with all information there!

As a conclusion, I want to say that our world ^{GR} change, and so do we. Rising prices for tickets ^{GR} into museums will lead to a huge problem, so I think that the best solution is to make them free.
