Too Many Toys?

Nowadays toys are easy to buy and there are tons of them in toy shops. Because of this inexperienced parents often buy a lot of toys for their children. But do children actually need all those toys?

If a child has many toys he will always have something to play with. He might also use them to play with his friends, who have fewer toys. But at the same time, buying everything a child asks for can lead to him becoming greedy and spoiled.

In my opinion, a child should have enough toys to play with but not too many. Buying more toys is just a waste of money. For example, when I was younger I often asked my parents to buy me a gorgeous doll. From time to time they did. In the end I almost never played with some of my dolls. Instead, I spent most of my time playing with older toys that I got from elder siblings.

I don't think parents shouldn't buy their children toys at all. What I want to say is that parents should spend money on more useful things than toys.
