Writing

There are many great books in the world that are not made into a film yet. Some of them are popular and long-awaited, some of them are not, but all of them would make an incredible base for the any film.

One of my recent reads - "Deeplight" by Fracice Harding - is not made into a film, too. The book quickly became one of my personal favourites. This is a story about a boy named Mark and his best friend Jelt. The boys (and the rest of people) live in the post-apocalypse world on a small island. Long ago their home was ruled by the Ocean Gods - giant terrifying creatures, who were killing destroy- ing ships and killing ~~ate~~ seamen. But then so-called Cataclism happened - and these God suddenly died. All that is left of them were the parts of their huge bodies that were magical. One day Mark finds one of those parts and uses it to save Jelt ~~but~~ from death, but something goes wrong and Jelt starts to turn into something weird and dangerous...

This book is very interesting to read, but it will not be easy to make it into a film. Firstly, the cast should be chosen carefully and age-properly. Secondly, there are lots of many landscapes and details described in the book, and it is important, ~~to~~ <sup>even crucial,</sup> to recreate all of them on screen (with the help of computer graphics) to make this fantasy world seem real. The Filmmakers will have to deal with many problems, it will be a pure challenge for everyone involved in this project, but I still think it would be a great idea to make a screen version of this book. "Deeplight" is the story about the real friendship, about dreams coming true, about self-respect and hard choices we sometimes have to make.

~~I'm sure that one day there will be a film based on~~
~~this book~~ I would definitely recommend reading this book to everyone who likes adventures and fantasy, and maybe one day we'll be watching the same story on screen!
