Writing

~~Misery~~
"MISERY" IN ACTION

Recently I have read a book that can turn into a fascinating thriller with the modern cinematography - "Misery" by Stephen King. Although this book has already been made into a film a couple of decades ago, I am sure that the more recent version would blow up the society, and here is why.

"Misery" is certainly not for everyone, because it touches a lot of topics that may be triggering to some people. The book is about an obsessed fan who kidnapped her favourite writer from the stage after a car accident. Because of his injuries Paul, the writer, cannot move much and Annie, the fan, uses it to her own benefit. She ~~torments~~ treats him horribly and makes a deal with him - or rather makes him rewrite the ending of his last book to her liking. Paul has no other choice but to obey her and only dream of taking revenge on her. Will he be able to escape? Or is trying to trick this woman a crucial idea?

All these emotions and tension would be represented amazingly in a modern movie. However it would be challenging for the filmmaker to find a suitable cast for the main roles. The atmosphere should make shivers run down people's spines. The viewer should be scared for Paul but afraid and cautious of Annie. ~~Music~~ Music would play a great role in the movie. A good composer can represent any emotion with his music, and that is exactly what our potential filmmaker needs.

In conclusion, it is a great idea to make a screen version of "Misery", so that ~~people~~ would be reminded of how cruel ~~people~~ could be and what the dark side of popularity is.
