Suitable for a screen

Recently I've read a book by Stephen King entitled 'Rose Madder' and found out that it's worth making into a film. I believe everyone would like to see this dynamic and fascinating story on their screens.

The main character of the book is a woman named Rosie, who suffers from brutal home violence. Once Rosie runs away from her husband and starts a new life. She makes new friends and finds a boyfriend, who helps the heroine deal with her trauma caused by years of abuse.

A film based on Rosie's story would encourage home violence victims to stand up for themselves, that's why it's a great idea to make this book into a movie. Moreover, the screen version of 'Rose Madder' would certainly become popular because it contains all the crucial plotlines for a good scenery: a love story, a revenge and true friendship.

However, there are several difficulties which a filmmaker could face making a film from this book. For example, its plot contains a lot of mystical events, some of which could be made into scenes of a movie only using expensive special effects. It means that the filmmaker would have to invite expensive specialists. What's more, every character of the book is described in details, which makes it challenging to choose suitable actors for the cast.

Anyway, I think that 'Rose Madder' is a wonderful story which is suitable for a screen version. Everyone deserves to see a movie based on it.
