Writing

Nowadays a lot of books are made into films. Every film wants to see his favourite book on screen. Not long ago I read a trilogy of books called "All for the game". It is a story about Nick - a teenager, who had to leave home with mother at a young age because his father was connected with criminal organizations. Because his father doesn't want to lose reputation, he uses different ways to get revenge on them. Nick and his mother travel all around the world to hide from this man, but one day they unexpectedly meet one of his business partners, and this event becomes crucial for his mother. She dies after that, and Nick has to deal with consequences alone. He doesn't want to live this way anymore, so he decides to settle in a small town and to live there for some time, before his father catches him. In childhood Nick was good at sport - it was made up by the author of the books, - so he joins a school team. Soon the way he plays gets recognized by professionals, and Nick get a chance to play in big sport team called "Foxes". He will face lots of challenges before team members became his friends. Together they will help Nick to face his past.

I think that there will be few issues that filmmakers will encounter. One of them is cost - a lot of characters have different nationalities. Second is action scenes - they need professional sportsmen.

This will be interesting for teenagers and young adult who like to spend time watching sport or detective films. Another good thing is friendship, which is bonding Nick with every character.
