My English-learning journey has started a long time ago. When I was about 5 years old my mom thought that the knowledge of English would help me in future. Now I'm a teenager and can clearly understand it was the right decision.

First of all, I can communicate with pretty much anyone while travelling, which can help in difficult situations. For example when my family and I were on a plane to France my brother forgot his phone on the meal dish, and I explained everything to the member of the cabin crew and we got the device back. Secondly, when applying to university after school graduation, I'll have a wider range of choices. Thirdly, new language lets you acknowledge new cultures, the diversity of people and their opinions, which I consider as the best part of learning.

Since kindergarden I've never stopped improving my skills. As you grow older, more opportunities open to you. I love seeing the progress in my speaking abilities, possessing more complicated grammar. When you finally understand what a native English speaker is talking about is awesome. Of course I can still make mistakes, but you can't always be perfect, so if I made one I'll just move on.

My main piece of advice to beginners would be "Don't be afraid". Some of my friends fear taking up studying English, because it's an experience they've never had before, but they should try before making any statements. I also suggest to watch favorite series, movie, cartoon in English, which will not only improve your listening, but also will be a lot of fun.
