How to not choose a rental apartment.

The last time I had to live in a holiday home was during this year's August when me and my family were on a summer vacation in Moscow. Traditionally, we prefer rental apartments to other ways of accommodation, but since most rental apartments situated in the central area of the city cost way too much for our budget, we had to choose out of the ones that are located closer to the edge of the city.

After a long drive from the airport, me and my family have finally arrived at the apartment complex, and the very first thing that we notice upon entering our place of living is the peculiar interior. It was very reminiscent of something you would see at your grandmother's house - carpets on the walls, wardrobes stuffed with antique teacups and old books, ~~and many other things~~. Personally, I did really mind it, but my parents weren't too happy with such design choices. Another much more problematic thing was the uncomfortably low temperature. We had to always wear warm clothing, or else it felt too cold.

Overall, the apartment wasn't too good, and the only redeeming qualities that it had were the comparably low price and a large size. So ~~the one thing that I~~ here are my recommendations: consider not only the price of your holiday home, but also the living conditions themselves and make sure to read other people's reviews, so that your trip would be as comfortable as it can be.
